Surviving Bushfire

Here is an interesting resource that has been developed by Andrew Berry from Kinglake.

Background

We lived in Kinglake ranges with the Lyre Birds, Wedge tail Eagles, Crimson Rosellas and all the other wonderful animals, you could say we were gentle forest dwellers who enjoyed the space around us and the rich Australian habitat. We loved where we lived and like everything else, it is permanently changing.

On Black Saturday it was irrevocably changed and so were we.

Unlike the mainstream media that seem to focus on the tragedy and horrific experiences, we are focusing on surviving a bushfire scenario and giving other people peace of mind by being fully prepared. It all comes down to preparation. Our little home designed sprinkler system and bunker saved three lives, it should have been more, but we all got caught out. No one expected something so powerful, so big and so fast.

We were all operating on bush fire guidelines sourced from previous fires; unfortunately, this information was not relevant to the extreme events that happened on that day.

This magazine is created to help give you "Peace of Mind", especially people who live in high-risk bushfire areas, by doing what needs to be done, it's not soft.

If you are fully prepared, with a sprinkler system and bunker, you can ask no more of yourself, neither can your wife.

Surviving Bushfire magazine tells the story of Andrew & Nicole Berry's survival of Black Saturday on 7th February 2009 in the Victorian Mountains of Kinglake Ranges. Their property was what they considered fully prepared for a bushfire and included a sprinkler system pumping water over the entire exterior of their home, plus a backup bunker just in case.

They knew that they lived in a HIGH RISK location at the top of a RIDGE LINE with a mile of forest below them. They didn't have the option of leaving on every Total fire ban day as they ran a local business and lived in the area. Although they ended up sheltering in the bunker, it was the sprinkler system that saved their lives. This is fully explained in their own words which are easy to read and understand. This is an extraordinary story of ordinary people beating the odds.

Andrew explains in a very practical style the workings of the sprinkler system with its own water resource, independently powered water pump, copper pipe work and water flow control valves and believes that a decent sprinkler system is the only defence system you can put forward in a wildfire scenario. Andrew also explains why they built the bunker that actually worked, just.

This magazine may help you to understand what you could be up against and may also help you to increase your odds of survival with practical information based on experience. You can order your own hard copy or Emag. This magazine is privately produced for the benefit of all people living in the wonderful Australian bush and is based on what works and practical knowledge learned from surviving quite possibly the harshest scenario in the worst bushfire.

To order your own copy go to <https://survivingbushfire.com.au/>

This new updated magazine gives you more detailed and up to date info on bushfire defence systems, the only defence you can put forward is an external sprinkler system on your home, building, the importance of strong water tanks if a fire comes through and fire fighting pumps, petrol or diesel?

Here is some information on sprinkler systems that can also be found at the website.

On Black Saturday three houses in our street had sprinkler systems that were activated. Out of those three houses, two burnt to the ground and the only house that survived in our street was the third with an activated sprinkler system.

Some of you may think that this was not a very good result but the fact of the matter is that the people in the two houses that burnt down all survived. There were twelve other people in houses without sprinkler systems and they all died on that dreadful day. That was the harsh reality. I believe strongly that sprinkler systems are a good idea. Our sprinkler system gave us the one critical thing needed whilst under attack from a serious fire front – time. Without the sprinkler system, we would have been incinerated in our home in minutes and would not have had the opportunity to retreat to the bunker.

When we had to leave the house because it was on fire the sprinkler system gave us safe passage for 90% of the way to the bunker, even though a third of the house was under full flame the sprinkler system was still going. I cannot emphasize strongly enough the proven performance of copper piping, it kept working under enormous pressure from a tidal wave of fire that just kept coming. Water was pumped through the sprinkler system by a Honda 6.5 hp petrol powered firefighting pump, we worked out that we needed 5 hp to gain a 3 m diameter water spray out of the sprinklers, we ended up with 4-metre diameter wet footprint. The pump was positioned right next to the concrete water tank with two brick walls and a Colorbond® steel roof, it was protected and it also had its own ventilation as one elevation was open.

Memories of the 1952 Wulgulmerang Bush Fire

By Nigel Hodge.

The 1952 fire began about the end of January from a camp fire left alight in the morning at Possum Point, near where Traci and Jeff Wilson-Brown have their home now on Wulgulmerang Creek.

It quickly spread to the East in the Little River Gorge area. Efforts put in by our locals and the C.F.A. and also The Forest Commission failed to surround it. After about 3 days The Forest Commission pulled out and went somewhere else and left us to do what we could.

Most of the local landowners and some mill workers (with a dozer towards the end) worked each day and put in some nights with knapsacks, rakes and axes for 21 days until rain eventually put it out.

The plan was to clean breaks around boundary fences joining Crown Land and keep it out of the paddocks, which we actually achieved by back burning all the time.

Some of the old hands said it won't get across the Snowy River, so we kept steering it away from private property and towards the Snowy hoping it would burn itself out or it would rain.

During the 3rd week, on a very hot day, the wind got up to gale force from the North West and the fire got sucked back up the steep gullies like a chimney. The smoke went up at least 2000 feet into the sky and spot fires were lit in the country east of the Snowy River. In about 3 hours it was over almost North of Orbost.

The Turn Back, Little River and Boundary Creek country just west of the Snowy River were badly burnt out with a very hot fire. Most of those areas were left with only black tree trunks with some limbs and no leaves anywhere.

By this time we were fighting it in the St Helena and Sims Gorge area.

The timber mill bulldozer was brought in from Mt Statham area and a break cut in with it around the edge of Alex Rogers' paddocks past the Lookout Rock to Cambells Knob track. No road down to the Snowy in those days, only a pack horse track.

A break was raked by hand around the boundary of McDonnell's Points Paddock, the Fisher Paddock, Eddie's lease, Sims Gorge and Canyon to link up with the break made by the bulldozer in Alex Rogers'.

One moonlit night we raked a break by hand from the back fence of Rogers' paddock straight down the top of the ridge to Cambells Knob and onto the Snowy River. This was all fired as a back burn.

We held this break for some days until another bad wind day when it broke and burnt out the Stoney Creek area between The Meadows and the Snowy River.

Then it rained. Hurray for a good sleep at last.

Buchan Flower Show Using a Compost Tumbler

To gain compost in three months from a compost tumbler it has to be well filled in one go. Add to this the time taken to fill it and then start your count down to three months and consider where you'll compost subsequent material while the tumbler's doing its stuff. Some tumblers have a dual barrel so you can fill one side and then over the next 3 months use the other.

Compost tumblers tend to be summer workers. Unless they're very well insulated, cold weather can prevent them from heating up fully.

There's also undoubtedly a difference between the composts from a heap and a tumbler. It's inevitable because the tumbler doesn't contain worms. Nor can you add worms, because when the temperature rises they can't escape and will die. So, all the good work that worms do in churning material through their guts and adding nutrients is lacking.

What you do get is material worked on by bacteria and fungi. It has reached a high temperature, several times hopefully, which should kill off weed seeds and disease spores and will have a looser, rougher character which can be dug into beds or used as mulch. It won't be that 'rich uniform crumble' that comes from a well-rotted heap.

Some people put it to one side once it has been in the tumbler to continue to compost, which then allows worms to move in and then your mulch will be ready.

If your compost is too wet, add paper or cardboard. Paper will absorb water as well as provide short-term air space to aid in circulation if it's crumpled or shredded.

This is also a great way of recycling your paper especially soiled pizza boxes, tissues or serviettes.

Shredding and composting documents or receipts is a great way to ensure they don't fall into the wrong hands.

There are also some papers that shouldn't be recycled or composted such as glossy magazines and foil wrapping paper. These types of paper have strong dyes, heavy inks and other printing chemicals that make them unsuitable. The best option is to avoid them in the first place.

Shredding paper that has been used for bedding for small pets (such as rabbits) can be composted too, as long as the animals are vegetarian (faeces from meat-eating animals can harbour dangerous microbes that aren't broken down by the composting process).
